British Involvement
In North Vietnam's Foreign Trade and Shipping

1. British trade with North Vietnam in 1966 represented less than half of one percent of North Vietnam's total trade. North Vietnam bought British textiles, chemicals, transport equipment, and other manufactured goods and exported to the UK principally food products and light manufactures (see Tables 1-3). Most of the trade moved from Singapore and Hong Kong, usually on ships of the USSR or the Eastern European countries. There is no evidence that either Hong Kong or Singapore was used to conceal the re-export of British goods to North Vietnam.

2. Although British trade with North Vietnam is negligible, approximately 15 percent of North Vietnam's seaborne trade in 1966 was carried in British ships, and since the beginning of 1965, the volume of North Vietnam's imports carried on British ships has increased steadily (see Table 4). In 1965 these ships carried substantial quantities of fertilizer and foodstuffs to North Vietnam from countries of the Free World. In 1966 and thus far in 1967, however, more than 90 percent of the British-flag ships calling at North Vietnamese ports were under charter to Communist China and were used almost exclusively to carry China's trade with North Vietnam. In 1966, import cargoes on these ships consisted principally of coal products, foodstuffs, and miscellaneous and general cargoes. In the first five months of 1967, 25 percent of these cargoes on British ships consisted of POL from Chinese ports.

3. Exports of anthracite -- the principal export cargo carried from North Vietnam on British ships -- as well as other commodities have declined sharply, partly because US air strikes have reduced the availability of these commodities for export (see Table 5). This decline in exports together with US demarches have caused a sharp reduction in the number of calls by British ships -- from an average of 11 per month in 1965 to less than 5 per month during the first five months of 1967.

4. Five Hong Kong companies own all of the British-flag ships that have called at North Vietnam during the past 15 months

5. In addition to British-flag ships, four ships under Cypriot and Maltese flags, owned by John Livanos and Sons of London, made 19 calls at North Vietnam since the beginning of
